ARMY COATS ANOTHER WINTER STYLE.

BY ANNE RITTENHOUSE.

Special Correspondence of The Star.
NEW YORK, December 18.—When the dressmakers brought out a few military coats at the beginning of the war they hoped for success, but they did not have it. One of the shrewd American dressmakers said that this would be the case. He argued that women never want to wear military things at the beginning of any war, and that it is only after war has grown stale or has ended that women take up the fashion inspired by it.

A Chance Now for the Military.

Possibly, now that the war is in the middle of its second year, women will be persuaded to accept the fashion of the uniforms in the field.

Of course, each one of these uniforms has been the inspiration of incorporated details in our clothes, such as pockets, narrow belts with buttons and cartridge pockets that have spread into organ pipes, used to give fullness on skirts, but the large things, like army coats and military caps and wide belts with huge buckles, have not yet made a way for themselves as they seem to be doing now.

The coat in the sketch, which has been worn by several women over morning street frocks, is modeled after the coat supposed to be worn by Gen. Joffre. It is of biscuit-colored duvetyn of a peculiar weave that resembles leather, and is neutral enough to be worn with any kind of frock or hat.

The beauty of it, as well as its novelty, lies in a deep seal cape, which is held down by the chest by large buttons of itself. The high collar and immense cuffs are also of seal, as well as the buttons that fasten the fronts, together. The belt, by the way, is slightly loose, like a girdle, and is pulled down below the waist line. The skirt of this coat is not uncomfortably wide. Women found that they made a serious mistake in adopting street coats of heavy cloth that were extra full at the hem, especially when they opened in front.

First of the new French coats opened in such a wide V-shaped wedge from waist to hem that it was quite uncomfortable when walking in any kind of wind. They flapped about like loose sails in a gale and made walking a terror.

Capes of Fur.

Now that midwinter is approaching and women are looking about for some unusual way to arrange their furs, there has come about a fashion for military capes made of peltry. They are very effective and protective—much more so than a fox strung about the shoulders or a high position collar.

The furriers are not especially happy over this fashion, for it involves too much work on their part and too little pay at the end.

Few women buy new capes, for they are not easily obtained, so they bring out the coats of the trunk, take them to the furriers and order capes made from them. If any one ever undertook the task of reshaping an old piece of fur she knows the difficulties of such a task. When the lining is taken away from any piece of fur except that of an old animal the skin of the fur resembles a map of the war zone, with every trench, fortification and aeroplane station indicated.

English Apple Tart.

Peel and core tart apples, put into a large saucepan, cover with boiling water, stew gently until the apples are tender but unbroken. Line the edges of a deep pie tin with crust, then fill the center of the dish with apples, dropping into the center of each a spoonful of orange marmalade. Cover the top of the dish with strips of pastry arranged lattice-fashion and bake quickly until brown. Serve hot.

Russian Apple Pie.

Peel and core eight large tart apples, put into a baking dish with a little water and bake until tender
